A bingo-loving pensioner from Bracknell could soon be staying with her stepson in the White House. It may sound unlikely, but if the race to be the next president goes as pundits predict then it could easily happen.

Democratic hopeful Barack Obama remains a frontrunner to take over from George Bush in the Oval Office. His family-guy image has won over voters of all ages and races across America. But less well-known is his Kenyan background - and the influence an English pensioner has on his life.
